Spring / Summer Edition.

Friends and family members who support loved ones who use drugs and/or alcohol are sometimes called 'the forgotten carers'. There's a lot of unhelpful information out there about 'reaching rock bottom', 'only they can help themselves', and societal stigma can leave carers feeling ashamed or responsible. There are helpful suggestions here, and national and local support for carers too. You are not alone;

"It was such a relief to talk to someone who was sympathetic to my situation and who didn't judge me for having the feelings I had. Talking to someone about how I was feeling gave me the strength to cope with things better." (Adfam website)

Adfam is the national UK charity supporting families and loved ones of drug and alcohol users, and complements the work of local teams such as the West Sussex Carers Support Service that has a specialist team for families of drug/alcohol users. Adfam led on a project in March 2017 focusing on older family members who support adult children with drug and / or alcohol issues called 'No-one judges you here', which features voices of real carers and the support they have received, encouraging others to seek support.

If you have a loved one who injects drugs, Adfam would like to interview you to find out more about the impact of hepatitis C on family members, whether your loved one has contracted Hepatitis C or not, details here.

Adfam and Cruse have also launched a new website; 'Bereaved Through Alcohol and Drugs', (BEAD) supporting families bereaved by substance use.

Now the evenings are lighter and warmer many people will be enjoying eating and drinking outside with friends and family. Recent research by CAMRA and Oxford Uni looks at how modest alcohol consumption in pubs can be positive, with the pub as community venue for all, from younger families to older people. If you're worrying about your waistline from all that pub grub, the amount of calories in your drink or the potential harms or damage linked to alcohol use, try 'Don't Bottle It Up!', a site with lots of hints and tips.

Do NOT suddenly stop drinking or reduce the amount you drink if you think you might be dependent on alcohol, and/or if you experience withdrawal symptoms without a drink. Your GP and CGL can provide medical support.

If you're in recovery and going to the pub is not your choice – why not check out your local recovery café? Café North in North Street, Eastbourne has a great range of non-alcoholic drinks and great food, as does the Cascade Café in Baker Street, Brighton. Lovely venues, no agenda, likeminded people, fabulous cake – what's not to love?!
